

Published on Kitchen Gardeners International (<http://kgi.org>)

Home > Fall: Taking stock in the garden with a camera

Fall: Taking stock in the garden with a camera

Wed, 10/20/2010 - 14:19 -- Tamra

As we rapidly approach our first frost date for my corner of Tennessee, I thought I would take note of all the plants thriving in my garden at the moment.

Image not found

<http://kgi.org/sites/default/files/u794/kale.jpg>

Kale- The most winter hard veggie I have ever grown

Image not found

<http://kgi.org/sites/default/files/u794/raab.jpg>

Raab- it loves the cooler nights.

Image not found

http://kgi.org/sites/default/files/u794/cherrytomatoes_0.jpg

Cherry Tomatoes- they languished during this summer's brutal heat, now they are finally thriving.

Image not found

<http://kgi.org/sites/default/files/u794/scallions.jpg>

Scallions- If the winter is not brutal, they will be around until spring, if we don't eat them all

Image not found

http://kgi.org/sites/default/files/u794/jamacia640_0.jpg

Jamacia- The seed pods are what make red zinger tea red. This hibiscus is an easy to grow annual.

Image not found

http://kgi.org/sites/default/files/u794/lemon_grass.jpg

Lemon Grass- I will dig this up before the first frost, potting a sprig or two to overwinter in the house.

Image not found

<http://kgi.org/sites/default/files/u794/fennel.jpg>

Fennel- The flower buds are as tasty as the leaves and bulb.

Group content visibility:

Use group defaults

Source URL: <http://kgi.org/blogs/tamra/fall-taking-stock-garden-camera>