

bazora question

Wed, 02/23/2011 - 21:37 -- bazora

Question:

Do I need to protect my newly planted raspberry canes from frost? If so, how?

Crops::

raspberry [1]

Topics::

fruits and nuts [2]

Group content visibility:

Use group defaults

Question Details (optional):

So today I had spent part of my morning getting my raspberry canes into the ground outside my home (I have about 9 of them, but 2 haven't been planted yet, they're still in a pot of soil). But then tonight, on my way to choir practice, I heard on the radio that they are predicting either tonight or tomorrow frost... and potentially snow down to 500 ft above sea level! So I need help -- I need to find out if a night of frost will kill my canes that just went into the ground, and what I should do to protect them! (It was kind of necessary to plant them, since my friend had given them to us yesterday and the roots were exposed from being dug up... they needed to get into soil...) Just a bit of info about where I live: I'm in northern California, right on the coast (about maybe a quarter of a mile from the ocean). I think we're zone 9? Not sure. Average temps here are about 40-85 year round (though with climate changes they've been wacky here too!) and the last time it snowed here, my now 26 year old husband was only 5 years old!

Source URL: <http://kgi.org/questions/do-i-need-protect-my-newly-planted-raspberry-canes-frost-if-so-how>

Links:

[1] <http://kgi.org/crops/raspberry>

[2] <http://kgi.org/topics/fruits-and-nuts>